UNCF presents the 'Mayor's Masked Ball 2024'

On Saturday, March 2, 2024, at the historic Hilton Milwaukee City Center, United Negro College Fund (UNCF) celebrated 80 years of empowering students and transforming the future during the 9th annual Milwaukee Mayor's Masked Ball. This year's event was Mayor Cavalier Johnson's third year of serving as the ambassador for more than 400 guests. As part of the the ball UNCF honored Dr. Joan M. Prince, Vice President Emerita, University of Wisconsin - Milwaukee, with the MASKED Award for being an advocated for minorities and women and is a proud UNCF alumina. The Corporate Honoree this year was We Energies Foundation, which supports community and neighborhood development initiatives, health and human services, education, and the environment. Former UNCF Milwaukee Area Development Director Gloria J. Ricks, was recognized as the Legacy Honoree. Ricks catalyzed UNCF in Wisconsin and helped open UNCF's first Milwaukee office in 1978. She retired after 33 years with UNCF. Her son and a longtime UNCF volunteer, Ruby Jackson, accepted the award on Gloria's behalf.

Eleven young leaders and the 2024 Class of UNCF Milwaukee Masterminds were also honored. Congratulations to Kyle Ashley, Stacy T. Clark, Tim Cole, Amanda Evans, Harry Evans, Lauren Feaster, Rep. Kaylan Haywood, II, Ashley Hines, Contessa Loble, Isioma Nwabuzor, and Oby Nwaybuzor.

This year's honorary Masked Ball Chair was Ophelia T. King of Milwaukee Public Schools, joining Fred Mitchell, Vice-President of Development, Mid-Atlantic and Midwest Divisions UNCF and Christal Stinson, Regional Development Director. Emcees for the evening were WISN 12 anchors/reporters Gerron Jordan (Howard University alum) and Diana Gutierrez.

Alzheimer's Association Wisconsin Advocacy Day at the Wisconsin State Capitol

On Tuesday, February 20, 2024, more than 150 advocates from across Wisconsin met in Madison for the Alzheimer's Association's 2024 Wisconsin Advocacy Day. These advocates met with legislators at the State Capitol to ask that Alzheimer's disease and dementia remain legislative priorities in the coming year in support of the more than 120,000 Wisconsinites and their families living with the disease. There was a strong Milwaukee contingency, including many advocates who met at St. Mark AME Church and bussed over to Madison together.

The all-day event kicked off at the Best Western Premier Park Hotel, when Governor Tony Evers and First Lady Kathy Evers greeted and encouraged attendees. A legislative panel discussion and other guest speakers illuminated best practices for sharing personal stories with lawmakers and how to ask for support for the following: funding the Wisconsin Dementia Crisis Innovation Grant program; ensuring high-quality care in assisted living facilities; and implementing the recommendations in the Wisconsin State Dementia Plan.

Mayor Johnson prioritizes public safety in Milwaukee's State of the City address

In a warehouse on the city's far northwest side, Mayor Cavalier Johnson took the podium on Monday, March 4, 2024, to deliver the State of the City address, emphasizing public safety.

"I have no higher priority than making sure Milwaukee is as safe as possible," said Johnson. This commitment comes in the wake of crime statistics released regularly by the Milwaukee Police Department indicating a nine percent decrease in violent crime, including robbery, rape, and assaults, from 2022 to 2023.

Statistics show a notable shift in the number of homicides from a record-breaking 215 cases in 2022 to 171 in 2023.

This year's figures point to a slight decrease, with 20 homicides so far, compared to 21 at the same time last year.

Johnson said the city has introduced additional police officers and strengthened collaboration with prosecutors and courts to ensure accountability.

"We must make sure people who commit crimes are identified and brought to justice," Johnson said. "The consequences should be appropriate and timely."

In addition to addressing crime, Johnson highlighted ongoing infrastructure efforts to combat reckless driving.

The mayor said the city is implementing 45 traffic-calming projects this year, reinforcing his commitment to Milwaukee as a "Vision Zero" city, striving for zero traffic deaths by the year 2037.

Gov. Evers signs bill reducing annual child care costs for Wisconsin families

Evers' office says Wisconsin parents and guardians paying for care will see an average benefit of $656 per filer.

Starting 2025, Wisconsin parents will see more money in their pocket for childcare. On Monday, March 4, 2024, Gov. Tony Evers signed legislation significantly increasing the current childcare tax credit for families.

"I'm signing Senate Bill 1023 to expand our state's child and dependent care tax credit and reduce the burden on families struggling with the high cost of child care," said Evers in a press conference at La Casa de Esperanza in Waukesha.

One of the biggest reasons why the governor and his administration say they support child tax credits, it's now more expensive to send your kid to daycare than it is to college through the University of Wisconsin system.

"The cost of daycare in 2021, on average, was $13,572," said Peter Barca, Secretary of the Department of Revenue. "The cost for undergraduate tuition at UW Madison, which is more expensive than the others, is $10,766."

The new law means the average benefit will go up significantly.

For example, a single parent with an income of $75,000 dollars a year and $5,000 in child care expenses would see their credit go from $300 a year to $1,000. A couple making $150,000 a year, spending $15,000 in child care for two kids, their credit could increase by 5, going from $600 credit now to about $3,000 per year.

The governor's office said this chance will provide tax relief to over 110,000 Wisconsin taxpayers at an average benefit of more than $656 per filer.

Black history, women's history: Septima Clark

As Black History Month ends and Women's History Month begins, it's always a special privilege to honor leaders who overlap in both—black women who did their part to change American history. As we approach the 60th anniversary of the Civil Rights Movement's Freedom Summer, one of these leaders to know and honor is Septima Clark, the woman Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., called the "Mother of the Movement." Throughout her long life, Clark pioneered literacy and citizenship education for black Americans, including the Citizenship Schools that helped inspire the 1964 Freedom Schools.

Readers familiar with Brian Lanker's marvelous photography collection I Dream a World: Portraits of Black Women Who Changed America may remember Clark as the proud, strong, and beautiful woman with silver braids whose portrait graced the front cover of the original book and captured her indomitable spirit. Clark was born in Charleston, SC in 1898, the second of eight children and the daughter of a formerly enslaved father. She graduated from Avery Normal Institute in 1916 with a teaching certificate, but because the city of Charleston would not hire black teachers, she found a job in a rural community on Johns Island, SC teacher in that community had only three students but was paid $85 a month, while the black school had two teachers for 132 children, and its two black teachers were paid a combined salary of $60. This was the first of many injustices she encountered throughout her long career, and as time went on, she just started speaking out even when others around her would not. As she put it simply years later: "They were afraid, but I wasn't."

In 1919 Clark returned to Charleston, where she volunteered for a NAACP petition effort that ultimately changed the local law prohibiting black teachers. For the next several decades she taught primarily in Charleston and Columbia while continuing her own education in the summers—at Columbia University in New York; at Atlanta University, where W.E.B. DuBois was one of her professors; at Benedict College, where she finally received a bachelor's degree; and at Hampton Institute, where she earned her master's. But after 40 years her career as a South Carolina public school teacher came to an abrupt halt in 1956 when the state legislature ruled that state employees could not belong to the NAACP. Clark refused to resign or lie about her membership and was dismissed.

Clark signed her name to a letter to 726 other black teachers asking them to protest the law, but only 11 of them agreed to attend a meeting with her and the superintendent, and on the day of the meeting only four showed up. She later said that effort was the big failure of her life, and she believed it failed because she tried to push the other teachers into something they weren't ready for. The lesson she learned was that people needed to be trained first so that they would be prepared to act—and the trainings she went on to develop helped shape the course of the Civil Rights Movement.

Clark had already attended several meetings at the Highlander Folk School in Tennessee, the legendary grassroots education center devoted to social justice. In the summer of 1955, she led a workshop at Highlander on developing leadership whose participants included a shy, quiet NAACP member from Montgomery, AL, Rosa Parks. After Clark was fired from her teaching job, Highlander's extraordinary director, Myles Horton, invited her to be Highlander's full-time Director of Workshops, where she pioneered innovative programs that combined literacy education for adults with citizenship and voter education. When the state of Tennessee forced Highlander to close in 1961, Clark continued the same work as Director of Education and Teaching for the Southern Christian Leadership Conference's (SCLC) new Citizen Education Program. Her workshops formed the basis for the Citizenship School movement she helped establish across the South.

In addition to teaching basic reading skills using familiar materials like the Sears catalog and covering practical topics like how to write checks, these "schools" taught basic civics and citizenship rights and focused on the arcane voting requirements specific to each local community that were being used to disenfranchise black voters. Classes met on evenings and weekends in churches, store backrooms, and other available spaces. Lessons were written on dry-cleaning bags in place of blackboards. They relied on training local citizens to teach other community members; Fannie Lou Hamer was among the local leaders who volunteered.

Clark eventually helped establish and recruit and train teachers for hundreds of Citizenship Schools: "They were in people's kitchens, in beauty parlors, and under trees in the summertime. I went all over the South, sometimes visiting three Citizenship Schools in one day... One time I heard Andy Young say that the Citizenship Schools were the base on which the whole Civil Rights Movement was built. And that's probably very much true." Rosa Parks also said that while she may have sat down once, Septima Clark kept on working and building: "I am always very respectful and very much in awe of the presence of Septima Clark because her life story makes the effort that I have made very minute. I only hope that there is a possible chance that some of her great courage and dignity and wisdom has rubbed off on me."

As a woman in the movement, Clark said she felt the men around her often did not do a good job of listening to or including her or other women. Yet she observed that it was largely women who got things done: "In stories about the Civil Rights Movement you hear mostly about the black ministers. But if you talk to the women who were there, you'll hear another story. I think the Civil Rights Movement would never have taken off if some women hadn't started to speak up." Even later in life Clark was never hesitant to speak up. One of the injustices after her 1956 firing was that South Carolina refused to pay the pension she had earned for her forty years of teaching or the pay she would have earned in the few years before her retirement if she had not been dismissed. She did not give up on fighting for those wrongs to be righted, and in 1976 the governor reinstated her pension, and five years later the legislature approved paying her back pay.

Although her signature accomplishment may be the programs she established for black adults, she never lost her original and enduring passion for educating children. During "retirement" in her 70s she became the first black woman elected to the Charleston School Board. Near the end of her life, she said: "Education is my big priority right now. I want people to see children as human beings and not to think of the money that it costs nor to think of the amount of time that it will take, but to think of the lives that can be developed into Americans who will redeem the soul of America and will really make America a great country." This Women's History Month, let's continue to honor Septima Clark's history-making legacy by making her priority our own.

Village of Brown Deer hosts first-ever Black History Program

On Wednesday, February 28, 2024, the Village of Brown Deer hosted its very first community-wide Black History Program. The theme: "We Are Black History - We Are Brown Deer." The village took this time to celebrate the month and recognize three Black History Makers who live in and/or have a business in Brown Deer. This year they honored: Angela Walters, past President of the Milwaukee Association of Realtors (the first black women to hold this position); Joanne Williams, former news anchor for WITI TV-6, and Dr. Ramard Wright, veterinarian and owner of Wright's Animal Clinic. Other highlights of the program were local singers and musicians, African drummers and dancers from MADD (Milwaukee Area Drummers and Dancers) and host for the program Spectrum One news anchor Sachelle Reed. Dinner was catered by Perkins Boyz on the Grill and desserts provided by Tiffany's Desert Bar. The program was supported and sponsored financially by generous donations to the Brown Deer Community Foundation earmarked for the Black History Program. This year's event was at capacity. The village is looking forward to this program being an annual event to be held in a much larger facility to accommodate all who want to attend.

A brief listing of Milwaukee's oldest black churches

By Jerome D. Henderson

In the final Book of the New Testament, John, the beloved disciple, wrote a prophetic word of encouragement to seven churches in what is now part of Turkey. At the time it was written, each of those churches was suffering from persecution at the hands of the Roman Empire. Collectively, they were known as "The Seven Sisters." The history of the African American church in Milwaukee is also one of overcoming barriers and obstruction. In honor of Black History Month this year, I have compiled information the 12 oldest black Baptist Churches in Milwaukee. These are "The Twelve:"

Eighty-seven MPS students earn highest scores at Solo and Ensemble Festival and advance to State competition

Eighty-seven Milwaukee Public Schools (MPS) students are advancing to the Wisconsin School Music Association's (WSMA) State competition, after their strong performances at the WSMA District Solo and Ensemble Festival. The competition was Saturday, March 2, at Rufus King International High School.

More than 400 MPS students from 17 schools performed as soloists or in ensembles in classrooms throughout the school. They played wind, string, and percussion instruments; and sang as soloists and in duets, trios, and choirs. It was a full day for the musicians; the festival lasted from 8:00 a.m.

until 4:00 p.m.

"The WSMA Solo and Ensemble Event held at Rufus King has grown each year since we returned to being able to make music together following the pandemic," said Sharie Garcia, the MPS district music curriculum specialist and the manager for the festival.

Schools represented were Academia de Lenguaje y Bellas Artes (ALBA), Bay View High School, A.E. Burdick, Fernwood Montessori, Golda Meir, Rufus King International High School, MacDowell Montessori, Maryland Avenue Montessori, Milwaukee High School of the Arts, Milwaukee Parkside School for the Arts, Milwaukee School of Languages, Marshall High School, Pulaski High School, Reagan College Preparatory High School, Riverside University High School, Victory, and Whitman.

The advancing students received the highest rating, a score of 1*, or one star. Another 13 students from Bruce Guadalupe School, Dominican High School, Brookfield Academy, and University School Milwaukee who competed also will advance to State.

Judges gave the students feedback after their performances, in spoken comments and in writing.

"Students, teachers and families should be very proud of their accomplishments," Garcia said of the MPS musicians.

The WSMA State Competition will be held in April, 2024 at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee.

Celebrate MPS social workers, March 3-9, 2024

National School Social Work Week is March 3-9, 2024. This is an important time to appreciate our school social workers in Milwaukee Public Schools (MPS). In every MPS school, social workers are essential members of the school team.

This year's theme for National School Social Work Week, chosen by the School Social Work Association of America (SSWAA), is "Pearls of Wisdom." The theme recognizes how school social workers share knowledge and resources to support their students, families, and school communities. The SSWAA website shares, "School social workers are the threads of compassion, weaving empathy, support, and understanding into the fabric of students' lives."

In MPS, school social workers (SSWs) seek community resources that dismantle barriers to student learning and provide targeted support. Their services include counseling, crisis intervention, advocacy, case management, collaboration with school staff, family support, behavior intervention, and a focus on promoting equity and social justice. By addressing the diverse needs of students and fostering a positive school environment, school social workers play a vital role in supporting students.

This school year, for example, services have been dedicated to supporting refugee and immigrant families. SSWs ensure that these families receive needed support to navigate the educational system so their children can learn and feel connected to their school community. Furthermore, SSWs support district grant-writing initiatives to bring relevant student and family resources to the district.

MPS school social workers have a range of resources they can draw from to provide students and families with crisis intervention and mental health interventions, including the MPS Homeless Education Program, special education evaluation teams, school-based mental health supports, and Head Start for children ages 3 and 4. In addition, school social workers conduct home visits, connect students to community resources, and collaborate with school staff, families, and community partners to improve services.

School social workers remain a critical link between home, school, and community, and they build connections and relationships with students and families. They know that relationships directly impact the quality of students' and families' lives, happiness, and ability to cope when times are tough.

Do you know a school social worker? If so, you are lucky! Help them celebrate by letting them know how important they are to you. Please recognize them for picking social work as their life's work. They are working diligently to foster the physical, mental, and emotional well-being of all of our students.

Thank you, MPS school social workers!

Five RSV complications in older black adults

While most adults only get mild symptoms when contracting the respiratory syncytial virus (RSV), the same can't be said of older adults. According to the Centers for Disease Prevention and Control (CDC), adults over the age of 60 should be particularly concerned when they have RSV. In previous years, there have been hundreds of hospital admissions of persons over 75 per 100,000 and those who were in their 60s weren't far behind. Black Americans, in particular, should be wary of contracting RSV as statistics show that they account for over 55 percent of all hospitalizations from the virus.

Five RSV complications for older adults

1. Worse COVID Symptoms

If you already have COVID-19 and then contract RSV or vice versa, the presence of the RSV usually makes the COVID-19 symptoms worse.

Some studies also suggest that having COVID-19 can make you more susceptible to certain viruses. Since both of these illnesses can significantly affect your breathing, it's worth talking to your doctor about the steps to keep you safe.

2. Worsening asthma or COPD

When settling into your senior years, you need to be especially careful when taking medicines, herbal remedies and supplements, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) says.

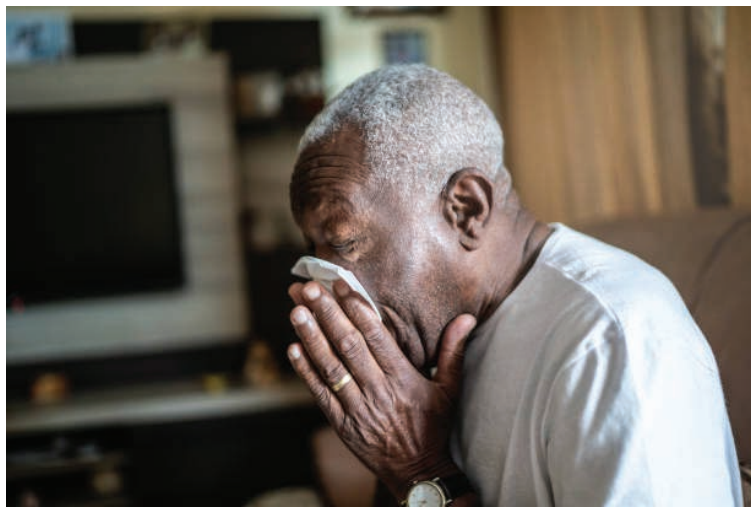

That's because older adults are likely to use more prescription and over-the-counter medications, which increases the risk of harmful side effects and drug interactions, the FDA said in a recent news release.

In addition, physical changes associated with aging can affect the way your body handles medications, and even how different medicines work in your body.

For example, the liver and kidneys might not work as well as they do for younger people, which can affect how a drug breaks down and leaves the body.

Even medications that worked well for a person during their youth and middle age might need to be adjusted or changed later in life, the FDA said.

Keeping all that in mind, the FDA has some important safety tips:

People who have chronic respiratory conditions like asthma and COPD are likely to have their symptoms worsen when they contract RSV.

In these cases, your regular maintenance treatments or emergency inhalers may not work as well. You should talk to your doctor as soon as you start feeling ill in case you need a different treatment while you're sick.

3. Pneumonia

Your illness can develop into pneumonia if your RSV symptoms get out of control.

Some signs that you have pneumonia are a high fever that leads to shaking or chills, a loss of appetite, shortness of breath, shallow breathing, sharp chest pain, and a cough that produces green, yellowish, or bloody mucus. Pneumonia must be treated by your doctor.

4. Bronchiolitis

Sometimes RSV can cause bronchiolitis, which is the inflammation of the bronchioles in your lungs. The initial signs of this illness are fever, congestion, runny nose, loss of appetite, and a cough.

As your condition worsens, you may experience wheezing, shortness of breath, and a worsening cough. You'll need medical intervention to treat it.

5. Worsening congestive heart failure

People who are dealing with congestive heart failure may experience worsening symptoms if they contract RSV. You'll need to look out for signs of heart trouble as well as issues from RSV. You should contact your doctor immediately if you have trouble breathing or have heart palpitations.

Signs you need to go to the hospital

It's common for adults to assume that they've caught a bad case of the cold or flu when they're dealing with RSV. There are a few key differences to look out for, though. For example, the fever that's associated with the flu often happens more quickly than the one with RSV.

More importantly, you need to know when it's time to go to the hospital. Some signs that your RSV is getting worse include an increasing fever, shortness of breath, wheezing, a worsening cough, and a bluish tint to your skin or lips because of poor oxygen levels in your blood.

How RSV is treated

If your symptoms are manageable, your doctor will likely recommend using over-the-counter medications until you feel better. However, once you need to go to the hospital, there are a few different treatment options available. You can't cure RSV but there are supportive treatments that help ease your symptoms and prevent complications.

Some options include IV fluids to keep you hydrated; oxygen to ensure that your blood remains oxygenated; ventilators to help you breathe; decongestants, and immunoglobulin if you have a weak immune system.

Tips for preventing RSV infections

One thing you can do to avoid contracting RSV is to stay away from people who are sick – whether or not they've been diagnosed with the illness. If you think that you have touched someone who's sick or they have been in your home, you need to wash your hands and disinfect all the surfaces in the house. It's also a good idea to avoid touching your face regularly as this is one of the ways that germs get introduced into your system.

Additionally, RSV vaccines are now available for adults over the age of 60 as well as others who may be more susceptible to the virus. You should talk to your doctor as soon as possible to find out if they're right for you.

It's typical for many Americans to contract RSV during the fall. Most of them won't experience bad symptoms but older adults are more likely to have complications. This appears to be especially true for black people. While it's best not to get the illness in the first place, it's just as important to know how to manage the symptoms if you have it.

Four medication tips to keep you safe as you age

1. Take medication as prescribed.

The best medicine in the world won't work unless taken correctly. Take prescriptions following the directions on the label and your doctor's instructions.

For example, medicines that treat chronic conditions like high blood pressure, high cholesterol and diabetes work only when taken regularly and as directed.

Don't skip doses or stop taking a prescribed drug without first consulting with your doctor. Not taking medicine as prescribed can lead to even worse illness, and potentially even hospitalization and death.

Antibiotics are a good example of this. Many antibiotics must be taken for the full length of time prescribed, even if symptoms have gone away. Stopping before the full course is done risks the infection returning in a stronger, more drug-resistant form.

You should also avoid taking medicine that's been prescribed to others. Doctors plan a person's medication taking into account potential side effects and drug interactions. Taking another person's prescriptions can cause unexpected side effects or dangerous reactions.

2. Store medicines properly.

Storing medications properly helps them remain safe and effective.

Most medicines are best kept in a cool, dry place. Avoid exposing drugs to extreme heat or cold. For example, don't leave meds in a car in the summer or winter.

Also keep medicines stored up and away from children, who might be tempted to take a medicine because it looks like candy.

Be sure to check the expiration date of medications and discard expired drugs promptly. Expired medicines might not work as effectively or actually do harm. Further, people with serious or life-threatening illnesses can be at higher risk of potential harm from expired meds.

3. Watch out for potential drug interactions and side effects.

Medication interactions occur when something ingested affects the way a drug functions, causing dangerous side effects.

These interactions aren't limited to prescription drugs. Over-the-counter remedies, herbal remedies and supplements can also cause a drug interaction.

Even common foods and drinks can cause serious interactions with medications. For example, grapefruit juice can affect how some medicines work.

Drug labels should contain information on potential interactions. Doctors and pharmacists also can help you avoid interactions.

Some drugs can also cause side effects that mimic other health problems, like memory difficulties, dizziness and sleepiness. You should discuss any such side effects with their doctor.

4. Keep a medication list

Writing down all the medicines you're taking can help you keep track of doses and detect any potential drug interactions.

The list should include the name of everything you are taking, including over-the-counter drugs, vitamins and supplements. For prescription drugs, note who prescribed it and why.

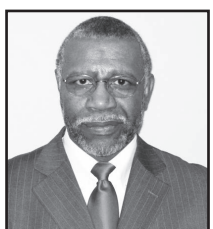

The list should be shown to all healthcare providers, including physical therapists and dentists. Ideally, you should keep one copy at home and another with you at all times.

I Forgive You (A Time to Forgive)
 By Ivory Snowden

I know sometimes we disagree and even fight.
 For reasons that don't make sense.
 We say things to hurt each other.
 But I forgive you, a time to forgive.
 I'm not perfect, and you're not perfect.
 We make mistakes and have faults.
 Because we are only human.
 Please don't hold it against me.
 I forgive you, a time to forgive.
 I know it's hard to forget about the past.
 But you have to live in the present,
 So you can see the future.
 Let's not waste a chance for peace.
 I forgive you, a time to forgive.
