MPS schools welcome students back to class for the 2025-26 school year

Photos Provided by MPS

Browning School rolled out the red carpet on September 2, 2025, as thousands of excited students returned to Milwaukee Public Schools (MPS) across the city. Students and families were welcomed by Superintendent Brenda Cassellius, Milwaukee Board of School Directors President Missy Zombor, Director Marva Herndon, Milwaukee Teachers Education Association President Ingrid Walker-Henry, district administrators, Playworks staff, and others. Principal Raymond Unanka and Browning staff welcomed guests and families at the Day One kickoff. Dr. Cassellius expressed her enthusiasm for being back in classrooms and was eager to kick off her first new school year in the district. Governor Tony Evers and State Superintendent Jill Underly visited Browning to cheer on students and help get the school year started. Children were excited to see their teachers and friends, start a fresh school year, and get ready for hands-on learning. Families watched the excitement, waved good-bye to children, and even shed a few tears as their little ones started a new adventure.

Christ The King Baptist Church install new pastor

Photos provided by Christ The King

Christ The King Baptist Church celebrated a significant leadership transition, as it installed its new pastor Rev. Treyvon Sinclair, Sr. (right photo). Rev. Sinclair is the second pastor in the church's history. Christ The King was established in 1985 by Pastor John W. McVicker Sr., who retired after 40 years of dedicated pastoral service earlier this year. The installation service started on Friday, August 22, 2025, with a Pre-Installation Service with guest speaker, Dr. Cynthia L. Hale of Ray of Hope Christian Church in Decatur, GA. The official service of installation was held on Saturday, August 23, 2025 at Christ the King Baptist Church, 7750 N. 60th St. which was presided over by Pastor Emeritus

John W. McVicker, Sr. The celebration ended with an Installation Worship Celebration on Sunday, August 24, 2025 with Rev. Dr. Phillip L. Pointer, Pastor, Saint Mark Baptist Church, Little Rock, AR. In April 11, 2025, Christ The King members unanimously selected Rev. Sinclair to become its new pastor. Christ The King was established in 1985 by Pastor McVicker and his wife Marilyn McVicker. During that time, Christ The King has evolved by growing its membership, building ministries, becoming a beacon in the community by creating outreach programs to name a few.

Milwaukee students return to school after lead remediation work completed

Thousands of students in the Milwaukee area are set to return to school Tuesday, with many attending classes for the first time since lead remediation work was completed at their schools.

Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. School is among more than 40 schools cleared of lead hazards, according to Milwaukee Public Schools. The school serves students from 4K through eighth grade.

Thousands of students and their schedules were disrupted last spring after lead concerns forced schools to close. Since then, MPS and the City of Milwaukee Health Department spent the summer cleaning up and repainting schools.

Common sources of lead hazards include lead-based paint, which can be found in any building, especially those built before 1978; lead-contaminated dust; contaminated soil; and lead in plumbing.

Lead remediation is an intensive process of cleaning, repainting, and replacing materials. The building at Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. School has been cleared for students, families, and faculty.

Once each school is cleaned, the Milwaukee Health Department has the final say in clearing a school to reopen. More information on the MPS lead action plan is available online, including a full list of schools that have been cleared.

Milwaukee Brewers and fans pay tribute to the late Bob Uecker

On Sunday, August 24, 2025, the Milwaukee Brewers paid tribute to franchise icon Bob Uecker with a ceremony worthy of his tongue-in-cheek nickname, "Mr. Baseball."

The .200-hitting former backup catcher, who went on to broadcast Brewers games for 54 years and become a beloved national celebrity was honored by a sellout crowd at American Family Field on Sunday, Aug. 24, as a cast of dignitaries spanning the worlds of baseball and entertainment gathered to celebrate his life.

An hour-long program emceed by Hall of Fame broadcaster Bob Costas was the centerpiece of Sunday's ceremony, highlighted by four video segments recounting Uecker's life with clips of some of his best and most memorable moments.

In addition to the on-field tributes – from Costas, former MLB commissioner Bud Selig, principal team owner Mark Attanasio and Brewers Hall of Famer Ted Simmons – there were many others throughout the ballpark.

There was an illuminated sign above the entrance to the press box, the newly renamed "Bob Uecker Broadcast Center."

Alongside the retired numbers of Brewers greats, there was a microphone icon accompanying Uecker's name, and artifacts from Uecker's career as a player and broadcaster were sprinkled throughout the stadium.

SENIOR LIVING

Five powerful secrets from the world’s longest-living people

What in the world are they doing?

All over our planet, people are living long, not just long, but in many cases, well into their late 90s and even 100s. Although these pockets of centenarians may just seem like lucky folks with great genetics, it’s actually more than that.

Known as “Blue Zones,” these longevity hotspots can be found across the globe. Whether it’s Okinawa, Japan; Sardinia, Italy; Nicoya, Costa Rica; or even certain locations in California, the reality is clear as day: some people, in some places, are living very long.

But what’s the reason for this?

Let’s get to the bottom of this once and for all, so you can start applying these amazing secrets to your own vital, long-enjoyed life!

1. Move naturally every day

It may sound simple, but across all known Blue Zones, daily exercise is key. But here’s the thing. It’s not about grueling workouts, running marathons, or blowing out your muscles at the gym. Instead, the long-living folks of these locations simply do natural movement.

What are ‘natural’ movements? Simple, they’re everyday things like walking, gardening, or even stretching. For instance, in Sardinia, shepherds walk miles daily through hilly terrain to tend their flocks. In Okinawa, older adults love to garden or practice tai chi, blending free-flowing movements with nature.

Why do these activities help? They’re useful for one primary reason. They’re low-impact, they can be done consistently, and they keep the body strong and flexible without overdoing it.

Just think of our ancestors. They walked long distances, worked the land, and often danced in communal celebrations. None of which requires a gym membership! So start simple. Take a 20-minute walk around your neighborhood with a friend or family member if you get bored. Go to a local park. Grow some herbs like basil or veggies like collard greens. Even if your space is limited, you can start a small pot on your balcony or backyard.

And finally, every morning, do some light stretching. It’s all about avoiding over-complication and embracing what feels natural. Many traditional African dance movements are the perfect recipe for feeling young and spry!

2. Eat local plants and meats and avoid sugars

Again, the trick here isn’t to overdo it. The diets of Blue Zone residents are remarkably simple yet nutrient-rich. Many of these individuals eat what is locally grown and produced. We’re talking about foods that are truly farm-to-table. They’re seasonal and minimally processed, like beans, greens, and root vegetables.

Take Costa Rica, for example, which embraces a natural diet full of corn, beans, squash, and small amounts of pork and eggs. Meanwhile, in parts of Japan, the superfood seaweed and sweet potatoes are a common staple. The important part of all these meals, of course, is the absence of added sugars. This, over time, means lower risks of chronic diseases, such as diabetes, hypertension, heart disease, and even cancer.

For some practical steps to reduce sugar, swap sugary sodas for water or herbal teas like hibiscus. Go big on local produce where possible, finding farmers’ markets, online organic grocers, and various community-based stores. Instead of processed meats like sausages, prioritize lean proteins such as baked chicken or fish, and for a little extra seasoning, toss on spices like turmeric or garlic for flavor and anti-inflammatory perks.

3. Build a close-knit circle

As the saying goes, keep a close circle.

It’s easy nowadays to try to be ‘friends’ with everyone. After all, we get overwhelmed with social media, we zip around on our smart devices, and we’re constantly interacting with people who move in and out of our orbit.

But what about those deeper, more meaningful, healthier relationships? If you look at Blue Zone residents, especially in places like Greece, it’s all about finding very close and tightly-knit relationships. These individuals will often gather for coffee or wine, sharing stories and letting loose. Oftentimes, faith is a great uniter. People can enjoy potlucks, build emotional resilience, and reduce stress all at once.

For Black communities, this ‘secret’ may resonate even more deeply, especially given the emphasis on family, church, and community. Whether it’s a weekly game night, book club with friends, or a church group that prays together, these social circles can go a long way.

In fact, research indicates that strong social ties can lower blood pressure and boost mental health, key factors in longevity. Not only can these shared experiences lift your spirit, but they can also create a safety net for life’s ups and downs – which we all need!

4. Use mindfulness to manage stress

Chronic stress is certainly a silent killer and has been linked to everything from heart disease to diabetes and weakened immunity. But in Blue Zones, residents counter their stressors with mindfulness. In Okinawa, people practice ikigai, a reflective process of finding joy in small moments. In Sardinia, daily naps and leisurely meals allow for mental unwinding.

Remember: mindfulness is not necessarily about long hours of meditation. It’s about intentional moments of calm. Whether you’re starting your day with a five-minute gratitude journal or merely relaxing with friends and family on a sunny Saturday morning, take a deep breath and just exist.

And speaking of breathing, deep-breathing exercises before bed are proven to lower stress hormones. It’s not difficult. Start by inhaling for four counts, hold for four, and exhale for eight. Apps like Calm or Headspace even provide guided meditations, so if you’re looking to carve out small moments to center yourself, the options are all around you!

5. Find a sense of purpose in your everyday life

Life is all about purpose.

Think about many of the mental health conditions that afflict us. Many times, we feel depressed or anxious or ‘stuck’ because we don’t know what we’re supposed to be doing. How we’re supposed to feel. Who we are ultimately trying to be...

When it comes to Blue Zone centenarians, a clear sense of purpose is key. For many ancient cultures, that purpose comes from raising a family successfully. In other areas, it’s about promoting the long-standing traditions of the community, usually through festivals and celebrations.

Point simply, purpose gives life meaning, and in many Black communities, purpose is about legacy-building. This can manifest in many ways, especially if it’s centered around things like mentoring youth, preserving cultural traditions, or advocating for racial justice and equality.

So how can you serve others?

Volunteer at a local school, get involved with a community garden, or just share your expertise and experiences with those younger than you. Your purpose doesn’t have to be something groundbreaking or grandiose. Rather than that, it’s about finding joy in contributing to something bigger than yourself. Reflect on what makes you feel alive – and live it!

Overall, living long isn’t about hacking your genetics or doing something completely off the wall. If science (and reality) show us anything, it’s about keeping things simple. Remember to appreciate all aspects of your life, even the bad moments, because it’s these bad times that allow us to truly appreciate the good ones.

If you can learn to live more naturally and embrace the ebbs and flows of this crazy existence we all have, you can live longer, stronger, and with more joy than you ever thought possible.
