Chris Taylor wins Wisconsin Supreme Court race

Web Images

Candidates Judge Chris Taylor and Judge Maria Lazar

Appeals Court Judge Chris Taylor, the liberal-backed candidate, is projected to win the Wisconsin Supreme Court race, securing a 10-year term on the state's high court and solidifying the court's liberal majority for years to come.

The Associated Press called the race just after 8:30 p.m. on Tuesday, April 7, 2026. "Tonight, the people of Wisconsin spoke," Taylor said in a statement. "What they said is clear — we are moving forward, for our rights, for our democracy, for every family in this state that deserves a fair shot at justice. Tonight, we stand strongly for a state Supreme Court that prioritizes the people of Wisconsin, their rights, their lives, and the independence of our great state. And for a Court that holds everyone accountable under the law — no matter how powerful or privileged. I will be a justice for you, the people of Wisconsin. Thank you Wisconsin! Forward we go together!"

Taylor faced Appeals Court Judge Maria Lazar, who was backed by conservatives, and was outspent nearly 8-to-1, according to the latest spending tally by WisPolitics.

"I don't think that I ran this race for no purpose. I think this race was ran so people in this state from now on know that judicial races are not political races," Lazar said during her concession speech.

The race, though, was a dramatically lower-profile contest from a year ago when now Justice Susan Crawford beat former Attorney General Brad Schimel and spending exceeded $115 million.

Taylor will replace Justice Rebecca Bradley, a conservative, who did not seek reelection. Her win expands the court's liberal majority from 4-3 to 5-2. Taylor will be sworn-in Aug. 1, just ahead of the November midterm elections.

Lazar and Taylor faced off in their only debate on April 2, 2026 on WTSN 12. The two clashed on issues ranging from abortion to recusal and their judicial records.

Former US District Attorney Eric Holder host community panel to raise awareness about upcoming election

On Wednesday, April 1, 2026, Wisconsin Democratic Party hosted former US Attorney General Eric Holder at the Wisconsin African American Women's Center, at 3020 W. Vliet St. This was a closed door event along with Congresswoman Gwen Moore and was attended by more than 40 community leaders, including elected officials, a judge, and state Democratic Party leadership. Holder who served as the US Attorney General during former President Barack Obama's administration, stressed the importance of turnout for the election that was held Tuesday, April 7, 2026; because a 5-2 liberal majority would strengthen the length of time liberals have control of the court and put it out of reach for conservatives in the next election.

Tuesday's election pitted liberal Chris Taylor against conservative Maria Lazar, following the decision by incumbent conservative Justice Rebecca Bradley not to seek reelection.

The court currently has a 4-3 liberal majority, and liberals will keep control of the court regardless of the result of the election, which may be one reason why early voting is down 59 percent compared to the 2025 spring election. Holder, who publicly endorsed Chris Taylor at the event, has an interest in the race because of the reshaping of political districts in Wisconsin and how they can affect who controls the government in the swing state.

"Republicans in this state used the power they got in the 2010 election to put in place partisan gerrymanders that lasted almost through the course of a decade," Holder said.

"I've been here, I think, since 2017 for every Supreme Court race that has occurred in this state; and it wasn't until a couple of years ago that we were able to actually flip control of the Supreme Court such that we had a court that was filled with justices who would rule on the facts, rule on the law, and wouldn't be beholden to special interests."

"And that's who (Taylor) is, and that's why this election is so important."

County Executive Crowley, Chairwoman Nicholson-Bovell approve legislation upholding Milwaukee County's climate commitments amid federal rollbacks

On Wednesday, April 1, 2026, at the Urban Ecology Center's Washington Park location, County Executive David Crowley and County Board Chairwoman Marcelia Nicholson-Bovell kicked off Earth Month by signing legislation to reaffirm the County's commitment to the principles and goals of the Paris Agreement, an international treaty on climate change, as well as the scientific findings that support regulating greenhouse gas emissions. The resolution comes in response to recent federal rollbacks in climate policies and investments by the Trump administration.

Milwaukee County first committed to the goals and principles of the Paris Agreement in 2017, following an initial federal withdrawal. In 2021, Chairwoman Nicholson-Bovell introduced legislation directing the Milwaukee County Office of Sustainability to adopt goals to reach net-zero operational emissions by 2050 and administer a strategic plan to do so.

In response to this, County Executive Crowley signed into law the Milwaukee County Climate Action 2050 (CA50) Plan that is aimed at achieving net-zero carbon emissions in Milwaukee County operations by the year 2050, marking a significant step forward in the County's commitment to environmental sustainability and stewardship. Under the leadership of County Executive Crowley and Chairwoman Nicholson-Bovell, Milwaukee County has already reduced operational greenhouse gas emissions by more than 46 percent from 2005 levels, reinforcing the County's longstanding leadership on climate action.

ABHM hosts an conversion with local author Imani Perry

offers a meditation on its fascinating role in Black history and culture. Perry was interviewed by book and culture influencer Cree Myles (right photo). This event was part of the ABHM's Book of the Month Club. This presentation and future Book Club events are available in person at America's Black Holocaust Museum or virtually via Zoom. For more events visit the ABHM's website at <https://www.abhmuseum.org>.

Spotlight on Success: Aisha Pasha Evans of ATC Hair Care

By Launita Dawson

In honor of Women's History Month, Milwaukee Times highlighted Black women who are making a difference in business. Today, we have the privilege of sitting down with Aisha Pasha Evans, owner and operator of ATC Hair Care, to learn about her journey, her passion for helping others, and her advice for aspiring entrepreneurs.

Launching a vision

"ATC Hair Care was launched in May of 2019. Her commitment to providing solutions for hair health began long before the company's official founding. After becoming a cosmetologist in 2002, she noticed a growing number of clients suffering from alopecia and hair loss, including children missing edges and seniors with thinning crowns. This observation sparked a mission: "I started researching ways to help hair grow back, took some classes in Illinois, and came back to Wisconsin to experiment with ingredients on willing clients. By 2004, I had something that worked, and I was able to offer these services in the salon." The product line itself was born after meeting a chemist in 2018, culminating in the launch of ATC Hair Care the following year.

Rooted in passion

When asked about the origin of her caring nature, Evans stated that she has always had an interest in hair. "My mother said when I was four years old, I told her I wanted to be a beautician, a teacher, an actress, and a singer." Although she eventually let go of some childhood ambitions, her love for hair and teaching remained strong. She became an educator and a cosmetologist and is still doing that today. Helping people beautify themselves has always been her passion. It wasn't until she saw the need for a product line that her focus shifted from service to solution.

Developing more hair therapy solution

Evans's drive to solve her clients' problems led to the creation of More Hair Therapy Solution—a line of hair growth products designed to be safe for hair, health, and the environment. "I have nine different products now," she said. Two are hair growth formulas, regular and extra strength. And the others include shampoo, conditioners and moisturizers for textured hair, especially those that may experience drier hair. These products not only add moisture but also serve as preventative care for hair loss.

Advice for the next generation—and beyond

Recognizing the importance of mentorship, Evans offered heartfelt advice for young women who know what they want but are unsure how to begin: "Make sure you genuinely enjoy what you pursue. Choose something that brings you happiness and fulfillment. Enjoyment is key; it motivates you to keep going even when things get tough. Reflect on whether you truly have a passion for your chosen direction; if you do, you'll find the drive to overcome challenges, learn, and grow along the way."

Her guidance extends to those more seasoned in life, as well. "For someone older, I always say: it's never too late.

If there's something you've always wanted to do, don't let age stop you. If you're in good health, you can still do it. It's better to do it late than never. The 'how' will come later—just know the 'what.' And if you are a spiritual person, pray about it. God will guide you."

Evans's commitment to her clients and the community goes beyond her products. As a local entrepreneur, she is a visible, approachable resource for young people—encouraging them not only in cosmetology but in business itself.

Looking ahead

Milwaukee Times is grateful for the opportunity to spotlight Aisha Pasha Evans's story and share her wisdom. As we continue to support local Black-owned businesses, we look forward to future collaborations with ATC Hair Care and other small business leaders. Thank you, Ms. Evans, for inspiring our community and reminding us that passion, perseverance, and purpose are the keys to success.

Telemedicine was supposed to expand mental health care—but Black patients are still left out

During the height of the COVID-19 pandemic, many health experts envisioned telemedicine as a “magic wand” that would bring mental health care to the most remote corners of the country.

But a new study suggests that while the technology is now common, it's still tough for those living in rural America when it comes to getting online access.

We also see clear structural issues in who gets digital healthcare, with Black patients using telehealth visits less often. Compared to white patients, more Black participants said they lacked both internet access and a way to get to a patient portal.

If we want to truly shrink racial gaps in cancer care, we need to make sure everyone has equal internet access and knows how to use digital tools.

What is Telehealth?

Telehealth, as defined by the Health Resources and Services Administration, involves using electronic information and communication technology.

It's a pretty broad term, covering things like giving clinical care remotely and teaching patients and health professionals.

What kinds of technologies make up telehealth?

- Internet
- Video conferencing
- Store-and-forward imaging
- Streaming media
- Land and wireless communications

Why telemedicine lacks in rural areas

Researchers analyzed Medicare billing records for more than 17,000 mental health specialists between 2018 and 2023 in all regions of the United States.

They looked at the share of their visits to patients living in rural, low-access-to-care or distant communities.

Their findings, published March 5 in JAMA Network Open, show that the massive shift to virtual care during the pandemic may have done little to help psychiatrists and therapists reach new patients in underserved areas.

The study found that specialists who used telemedicine the most saw only a tiny increase — less than one percentage point — in patients from rural regions compared to specialists who rarely used video calls.

Interestingly, most of these long-distance visits weren't with new rural residents; instead, they were existing patients originally from the city who had moved away and kept their old doctors via the screen.

“We had thought the dramatic shift from in-person

care to telemedicine among mental health specialists would lead to them caring for substantially more patients in rural communities,” study author Drew Wilcock said in a news release. He's a lead research scientist at Brown University School of Public Health in Providence, Rhode Island.

“Unfortunately,” he added, “We just don't see it.”

Perhaps the most surprising finding was that telemedicine might actually be making it harder for some people to find a doctor.

Specialists who relied heavily on virtual visits saw their patient panel shrink, seeing 3.6 percent fewer new patients overall.

Diagnosed with Advanced Small Cell Lung Cancer? Learn more about a new study for patients with ES-SCLC.

This suggests that while video calls make it easier to maintain long-term relationships with current patients, it's not opening up slots for anyone new.

The researchers argue that the problem isn't the technology, but the legal paperwork. Currently, a doctor in one state often cannot treat a patient in another without a separate, expensive license.

“Currently, it is too administratively burdensome for a mental health physician to get a license in many states,” explained lead author Dr. Jacob Jorem, a fellow at Harvard Medical School in Boston.

Making it easier for clinicians to practice across state lines is a critical first step toward reaching rural patients, he suggested.

“The potential of telemedicine can't be ignored,” said study author Dr. Ateev Mehrotra, a professor of health services, policy and practice at Brown.

“But simply offering telemedicine will not address the barriers that many rural patients face in obtaining mental health care,” Mehrotra said. “For telemedicine's potential to be reached, we need policy interventions to address those barriers. Improving how we license physicians is a critical first step.”

How to access telehealth resources?

If you are struggling to find a mental health specialist or are currently living in a rural area, these strategies may help you bypass some of the common hurdles mentioned in the study:

Look for “Compact”

States: While licensing is a barrier, many states participate in the Psychology Interjurisdictional Compact (PSYPACT) or the Interstate Medical Licensure Compact (IMLC). If your state is a member, you can see specialists located in any other member state without them needing a separate local license.

Utilize Community

Health Centers: Federally Qualified Health Centers (FQHCs) often have established telemedicine networks and sliding-scale fees. They are specifically designed to serve high-need, rural areas and may have shorter wait times for new patients.

Check with Your Insurance Provider: Rather than searching for a doctor manually, use your insurance's dedicated telehealth portal. These platforms often employ specialists specifically licensed to cover your region, ensuring you aren't trying to book with a “city doctor” whose panel is already full.

Verify Your Tech Infrastructure: Before your appointment, use a tool like Speedtest to ensure your connection can handle video. If your home internet is spotty, check if your local library or community center offers private “telehealth booths” or high-speed Wi-Fi.

Advocate for Audio-Only Visits: If video is a barrier due to bandwidth or comfort, ask if your provider offers audio-only sessions. Some Medicare and private insurance plans expanded coverage for phone-based therapy during the pandemic, which can be a lifesaver in “dead zones.”

Ask About “Bridge Care”: If a specialist's panel is full, ask if they can provide a one-time consultation or “bridge” care to stabilize your situation while you remain on a waiting list for a permanent provider.
