Greater Milwaukee Urban League hosts Annual Meeting, celebrates partnerships and collective impact

On Wednesday, April 15, 2026, the Greater Milwaukee Urban League (GMUL) recently convened its Annual Meeting, hosted by Spectrum, bringing together community leaders, civic dignitaries, businesses, board members, and local supporters to celebrate the organization's ongoing commitment to equity and empowerment across the Milwaukee community. This year's gathering centered on the theme Partnerships and Collective Impact, underscoring GMUL's belief that lasting change is achieved not in isolation, but through intentional collaboration across sectors and communities.

Dr. Eve M. Hall, President and CEO of the GMUL, delivered a compelling address on the power of partnerships and the measurable difference that unified, community-driven efforts can make in the lives of Milwaukee residents.

The event was highlighted by a keynote address from Dr. Brenda Cassellius, Superintendent of Milwaukee Public Schools, who brought a timely and powerful perspective on the role of educational institutions in advancing partnerships throughout the city.

Adding a special touch of inspiration to the evening, students from Lynn and Harry Bradley Technical and Trade High School and Carver Academy of Mathematics and Science greeted attendees — a meaningful reminder that the work of the Greater Milwaukee Urban League begins and ends with Milwaukee's young people.

The Annual Meeting, made possible through the generous support of Spectrum, served as both a celebration of progress and a rallying call for the collaborative work ahead, reinforcing GMUL's role as a cornerstone institution in building a more just and thriving Milwaukee.

Supervisor Priscilla E. Coggs-Jones Sworn In for the 5th Year

Supervisor Priscilla E. Coggs-Jones was officially sworn in on Monday, April 20, 2026, at the Milwaukee County Courthouse by the Honorable Lena C. Taylor, marking the start of her fifth year serving Milwaukee County's 13th District.

The ceremony reflected both legacy and leadership, as Judge Taylor—who has known Supervisor Coggs-Jones since childhood—administered the oath in a moment that honored generational service and deep community roots.

Following the ceremony, Supervisor Coggs-Jones was reelected as Second Vice Chairwoman of the Milwaukee County Board of Supervisors, continuing her role in countywide leadership alongside Chairwoman Marcella Nicholson and First Vice Chairman Steven Shea.

Also sworn in were members of the Milwaukee County Board of Supervisors: Marcella Nicholson, Steven Shea, Willie Johnson, Jr., Deanna Alexander, Steve F. Taylor, Sheldon A. Wasserman, Patti Logsdon, Felesia A. Martin, Shawn Rolland, Juan Miguel Martinez, Kathleen Vincent, Caroline Gómez-Tom, Justin Bielinski, Sky Z. Capriolo, Jack Eckblad, and Anne O'Connor.

The Board also proudly welcomed newly elected Supervisor Leevan D. Roundtree Jr., representing District 5, marking a moment of transition and renewed energy in county leadership.

During her tenure, Supervisor Coggs-Jones has led community listening sessions, supported neighborhood beautification efforts, advanced health equity initiatives, and strengthened partnerships that benefit families and underserved communities.

Mount Pilgrim celebrates with an all White Fellowship

On Saturday, April 11, 2026, Mount Pilgrim Missionary Baptist Church family celebrated an evening in white fellowship at the Four Point Sheraton North Hotel. The events theme was, "A Faithful people working together." The Master and Mistress of Ceremony were Rev. Kurt Boyd and Jackie Boyd.

A warm welcome was given by Takita Jackson, and Deacon Arnaldo Rivas was in charge of the musical selections. There was an icebreaker where a member from each ministry talked about their ministry, reflecting the idea that everyone is called to serve.

Minister Dedric Fuller spoke on the meaning of family. Chairperson Sharon A. Posley expressed gratitude and thanks to all participants.

The evening ended with Pastor George H. Jolly and first Lady Diane Jolly expressing their love and appreciation to the members for their dedication and faithfulness.

Being Frank

By: Frank James
Special to the Milwaukee Times

Freedom is a change of thought

Imagine a person who has been in prison for twenty years being released. This person is free. Their debt to society has been paid. Imagine this person going back into the prison and locking themselves into their former cell without having committed a new crime. This makes no sense to any sane person. Yet, this is what many people in the world do daily. They lock themselves into the past and refuse the freedom a new day brings.

We all have done the following. Wake up in the morning and recall something that took place the previous day. You grasp this event, right or wrong, and rehash it all during the day. You allow the event to influence your physical actions, or your thoughts. You go through the entire day being influenced by something that took place in your past that probably doesn't have anything to do with your current reality. Everyone has done this before. Be honest. Tell the truth and shame the devil.

Let's take this to another level. How many of you have allowed previous interactions with others shape how you interact them later in life? You all know what I am talking about. A person said, or did something to you, in the past and you treat them accordingly in the present. You are treating them in such a fashion, not because they are doing the same act to you now, but because of how they did you in the past. You have carried a burden, labeled as a memory, for some time and allowed this past memory to control your actions in the present. You are doing the same thing the freed prisoner who goes back into his cell does. You are locking yourself into the past and not enjoying the freedom you have been granted.

Many people complain about wanting to be free, but refuse to take the steps necessary to be free. These people carry old slights, and even victories from days long gone, and try to live from these memories. You see this every day, but this act is so commonplace you fail to recognize this. Think about the friend who still has a grudge towards someone they haven't seen in years because of an incident that took place years ago. How many of you distance from people you used to be friends with because of how the person acted when you hung out "back in the day?" In many instances the person you are distancing from has changed and you never find out because of a contaminated view. You are locking your mind up in a past that you should be free of, but are still prisoner to.

No one is suggesting you continue to make the same mistakes that you did years ago. What is being said is that you are free of the mistakes and the views you held years ago. You can free your mind and grasp a new reality that enables you to breathe easy. You can see people from a new perspective while creating a new image of them based on now, and not back then. If the person is still acting like they did years ago, fine. You have a new perspective. Instead of possibly feeling disgust, or anger, you can feel compassion for them because you understand they are locked in a prison of their own making.

If you want true freedom, then free your mind. Allow yourself to grow and become new while enjoying the gift of life. Release yourself from the prison that memories and negative people have created for you. Don't be your own gaoler. Open the doors of your mind and be free. This is better than gritting your teeth and reliving past memories that keep you popping TUMS.

Audit advisory committee notes MPS’s financial progress, reasons for budget gap

Milwaukee Public Schools’ (MPS) audit advisory committee, which has reviewed the district’s 2024-25 audit and deficit, noted improvements in the district’s financial processes at its April 16 meeting. It also reviewed the sources of the $46 million deficit from the district’s 2024-25 budget. Among the strides MPS has made in the past year in its financial reporting are completing three annual financial audits in the span of just more than one year. In the 2024-25 work completed in January, however, external auditors identified that the district ended that school year with a $46 million deficit.

The audit advisory committee is made up of five voting members: one MPS Board member and four audit professionals from outside MPS. The Board member currently is President Missy Zombor.

Improved time-frame

Auditors at CliftonLarsonAllen noted significant improvement in both the audit and the district’s annual financial report: Each was completed more than six months earlier than the prior year’s documents.

Auditors identified progress on past findings as well as more specific work needed on financial controls, timely submissions, and accurate data. One step to address remaining issues is building a new system of accounts within MPS that “talks” to the state’s financial system.

That new “chart of accounts” is expected to go live in 2026-27. With this in place, the district will be able to identify specific issues earlier and resolve them.

Single audit improvement

Auditors also identified improvement in the “single audit,” which includes grant-funded costs.

A number of the district’s past issues have been fully resolved, and other findings are reduced in severity. The district will continue to address issues that remain, including special education cost documentation.

Analysis of deficit

The Office of Accountability and Efficiency presented an analysis of the district’s $46 million deficit from the 2024-25 budget year that reinforced the administration’s earlier findings for the shortfall: underbudgeting in salaries, benefits, and transportation costs.

MPS also experienced higher-than-expected expenses in construction and capital projects, including substantial expenses to stabilize lead paint in schools.

Addressing the issues

The district is strengthening connections between Finance and Human Resources systems to ensure personnel expenses are properly budgeted both at a district and school level.

The district also is implementing proper controls to prevent overspending and a regular process to match expenses against revenues throughout the year so any gaps are identified and promptly addressed.

MPS already has put in place stronger processes to identify and regularly stabilize lead paint issues.

MPS is fully up to date with its annual external audits filed with the state. Having the 2024-25 audit completed as the district builds its next budget is a necessary step that had not taken place in recent years.

The district is committed to building a balanced budget for 2026-27, as required by law. The district has reduced non-classroom positions so it can both address the deficit and redirect resources to classrooms, including more classroom teachers and paraprofessionals. Updates will be posted to the MPS budget planning web page, which includes estimated new savings and revenue and new expenses.

Feeling stressed by the news? Here's how to protect your peace

In a 24-hour news cycle fueled by push notifications and endless scrolling, many people are taking in alarming headlines from the moment they wake up until they fall asleep. It can feel productive to stay informed, even responsible. But how does this constant stream of distressing information quietly impact the body and mind?

If you have ever felt anxious, heavy, or emotionally drained after scrolling through the news, you are not imagining it. Your nervous system is responding to what it perceives as a constant stream of threats. Understanding what is happening beneath the surface can help you shift your habits without disconnecting from the world around you.

Learn about why you feel depressed, heavy, stressed, or fatigued when a constant stream of news headlines consumes you.

Understanding your nervous system

Modern life is not nervous system-friendly. What is supposed to be a tool for survival must now try to process a constant stream of alarming information, and that stream takes its toll.

The autonomic nervous system, which regulates involuntary physiological processes, has two key branches: the sympathetic nervous system, which activates your stress response, and the parasympathetic nervous system, which helps you rest, digest, and recover.

When you encounter something your brain perceives as a threat, like a headline about violence or crisis, your amygdala, the part of the brain responsible for detecting danger, sends a signal to your hypothalamus. This triggers the sympathetic nervous system, setting off a cascade of physiological changes. Your breathing becomes quicker and shallower. Your heart rate increases. Blood gets redirected away from digestion and toward your muscles so you can react quickly.

This process happens in seconds and is incredibly effective when you are facing a real, immediate threat, like a bear in the woods. But in the context of modern media, the "threats" are often distant, ongoing, and unresolved. Your brain does not always differentiate between reading about danger and experiencing it. As a result, repeated exposure to alarming headlines can keep your nervous system cycling through stress responses without ever completing the recovery phase.

Over time, this can create a baseline state that's more anxious and reactive. You may find it harder to relax, more difficult to focus, or feel more overwhelmed. What you are experiencing is not weakness. It is a nervous system that has not been given enough opportunities to return to safety.

The psychological impact of doomscrolling

The habit of continuously consuming negative, more affectionately known as doomscrolling, has a cumulative effect on mental health. Each headline adds another layer of stress, especially when there is no resolution or sense of control. Over time, this can lead to feelings of helplessness, anxiety, and emotional fatigue.

This impact can be even more pronounced when headlines frequently center on harm, injustice, or trauma involving people of color. Research and media analyses have shown that news coverage often disproportionately highlights violence and negative outcomes in communities of color. For readers who identify with these communities, this is not just information. It can feel personal, triggering, and deeply unsettling.

This repeated exposure can activate not only fear and anxiety, but also grief, anger, and a sense of vigilance that is hard to turn off. It can feel like bearing witness over and over again without relief or resolution. Over time, this can contribute to racialized stress and emotional fatigue, where the nervous system is not only responding to general threat, but to experiences tied to identity, history, and lived reality.

Naming this impact matters because it validates that the exhaustion many Black readers feel is not just about media consumption. It is about carrying the weight of stories that reflect real risks, real losses, and real experiences within our own communities.

The stress hormone response

When your brain perceives a threat, it activates the hypothalamic-pituitary-adrenal (HPA) axis, a communication system between your brain and body that regulates stress. This leads to the release of hormones like adrenaline and cortisol.

Adrenaline acts quickly. It sharpens your focus, increases your heart rate, and prepares your body for immediate action. Cortisol works more slowly but has longer-lasting effects. It helps regulate energy by increasing blood glucose levels and suppressing nonessential functions, such as digestion and the immune response.

In short bursts, this system is protective. Repeated activation without adequate recovery can dysregulate the body. Constant news exposure can lead to chronically elevated cortisol levels, which are associated with sleep disturbances, increased anxiety, brain fog, weight gain, and even long-term impacts on cardiovascular and immune health.

Another important piece is that your body does not get a clear signal that the "threat" has ended. Unlike a real-life stressful event, which has a beginning, middle, and end, the news cycle is continuous. Your nervous system stays in a loop, where stress hormones are repeatedly released without a full return to baseline. That lingering state of activation is what often leaves people feeling both wired and exhausted simultaneously.

Find your balance

Staying informed matters, but there's a difference between intentional awareness and constant overstimulation.

Here are a few simple ways to start creating balance between prioritizing your physical and emotional wellness without disconnecting completely:

- Choose specific times of day to check the news, like once in the morning and once in the evening, instead of scrolling throughout the day
- Turn off non-essential push notifications so your attention is not constantly being pulled toward breaking updates
- Limit your sources to one or two trusted outlets to reduce information overload and repetition
- Set a timer when you start scrolling to create a natural stopping point
- Notice how your body feels while consuming news, and pause if you feel tension, tightness, or anxiety building
- Balance heavy content with something ground-

- ing, like stepping outside, stretching, or taking a few slow, deep breaths
- Consider a "no news" buffer zone at the beginning or end of your day to protect your mental space

These small shifts can help signal to your nervous system that it is safe to come out of a stress response and return to a more regulated state.

The way you engage with the news is not just a habit. It is a relationship with your body, your mind, and your sense of safety in the world. It is easy to believe that staying constantly plugged in is the only way to remain aware or responsible, but your well-being matters too.

You deserve to feel informed without feeling overwhelmed. You deserve moments in your day where your body can soften, your breath can deepen, and your mind can rest. Paying attention to how the news makes you feel is not avoidance. It is a different kind of awareness.

When you begin to care for your nervous system with the same intention that you care about staying informed, something shifts. You become more grounded, more present, and ultimately more able to engage with the world in a way that is sustainable, compassionate, and clear.
