JCrew Foundation Inc. held its 3rd Annual Adaptive Basketball Camp at Howard Fuller Collegiate Academy on April 25, 2026 from 2pm-4:30pm. This camp is tailored to individuals with Autism and Other Disabilities, in the Milwaukee Community, where participants work on improving their skills, mastering the game and boosting their confidence on the court. # Archwell Health opens new Mitchell West center on Martin Luther King Dr.

A new health center opened its doors on Tuesday, April 28, 2026, designed to provide Milwaukee seniors with quality care.

ArchWell Health is opening two new facilities in both the Harambee and Mitchell West neighborhoods.

To celebrate, a ribbon cutting event was held at the Harambee location.

Milwaukee Mayor Cavalier Johnson was there and believes this center will provide strong, personalized care to its residents.

"Seniors have done so much in their time building up our community. You shared your wisdom, you have worked hard, you have raised families, you're taking care of the people who are around you," said Mayor Johnson. "Now it's time to make sure that you have access, that you have the opportunity, that you have the care you not only need but deserve."

ArchWell Health has more than 80 centers across the country and the Mitchell West center -- located at 2730 N. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Dr. -- will be opening Thursday, April 30, 2026 in what was the former location for the Q restaurant.

Family and friends of LaTroy Harris launch 'I Will Not Die to Gun Violence: The Latroy Harris Initiative'

On Wednesday, February 4, 2026, friends and family of LaTroy Harris gathered to introduce the "I Will Not Die to Gun Violence: The Latroy Harris Initiative." The initiative was announced at a press conference that began in an unconventional way – with a skit depicting the devastation families face after losing a loved one to gun violence. The program is the work of Monte Mabra, Harris' brother.

"I Will Not Die to Gun Violence: The Latroy Harris Initiative" is a 10-week program designed for people involved in gun-related cases and includes meetings with police, paramedics and structured self-reflection.

What began as a brother's refusal to surrender to revenge evolved into the first program of its kind—a 10 week, 20 session curriculum designed to interrupt the cycle of retaliation before it begins. The curriculum does more than teach conflict resolution; it challenges the emotional reflexes that fuel gun violence, urging participants to confront anger, trauma, and the lure of retaliation.

As word spread, the initiative drew the attention of newsrooms, radio hosts, podcasters, and community leaders. Interview after interview, Mabra repeated a sobering truth: every gun death drains Wisconsin of $1.2 million, and every non fatal shooting costs $644,000. These figures—drawn from analyses by Ted R. Miller and colleagues using CC fatal injury data and HCUP non fatal injury data—are the same numbers used by EveryStat/Everytown Research to calculate the state's gun violence burden. But for Mabra, the cost is not measured in dollars. It is measured in empty chairs at family tables, in children who grow up without fathers, in communities conditioned to brace for sirens.

Support began to gather around the initiative. Attorney Michael Hupy, of the Hupy & Abraham law firm and president of Crime Stoppers in Milwaukee, posted a $25,000 reward for information leading to Brown's arrest. He also contributed a private amount to launch the first 10 week session for data collection. Reid's New Golden Gates Funeral Home stepped forward as well, covering part of the memorial service and contributing to the initiative's data collection efforts. The City of Milwaukee's Community, Wellness, and Safety division added resources and support, signaling institutional belief in the program's mission.

But the heart of the initiative remains Mabra's conviction that forgiveness is the first step toward healing—a deliberate act of self healing that interrupts the cycle of violence. He created the curriculum not only to honor his brother, but to restrain his own instinct for retaliation—a personal act of resistance against generational patterns of harm.

Today, the initiative is accepting referrals, welcoming:

- Youth ages 12–17, male and female
- Adults ages 18–45, male and female, who have a gun case, are awaiting sentencing, or whose families fear they may be pulled toward violence

The program stands as both memorial and movement—an effort to ensure that Latroy Harris's story does not end with the sound of gunfire but continues through the lives it saves. For information on enrollment please contact (414) 306 - 2107.

CDC pauses some infectious disease testing — Here's how you can still get checked

Some lab testing for rabies, Mpox and other infectious diseases are not available right now, as the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention has temporarily paused certain testing, raising questions about access and timing for patients.

Federal officials have said the move is part of a routine review, and testing is still available through other channels. For patients needing these tests, it's important to act quickly if exposure is suspected and to know where to go for care.

Health experts say that early action can be critical. They encourage people who believe they have been exposed to an infectious disease to contact a doctor or local health department right away. Rather than wait for symptoms to worsen, many infections can be treated more effectively when caught early.

What's behind the pause

The CDC halted testing for more than two dozen diseases in late March as part of what officials described as a routine review of lab services. The Department of Health and Human Services said the goal is to ensure high-quality testing and improve operations.

"We anticipate some of these tests will be available through CDC labs again in the coming weeks," Andrew Nixon of the Department of Health and Human Services told NBC News. "In the meantime, CDC stands ready to support our state and local partners to access the public health testing they need."

Some tests may return in the coming weeks, though the full timeline is unclear right now.

What you should do now Doctors say patients should focus on access, not delayed testing and treatment. Even with the federal pause, testing remains available in most communities.

Here are steps to take now:

- Contact your local health department to find nearby testing sites
- Ask your doctor about testing through hospitals or private labs
- Check insurance coverage, as most plans cover medically necessary testing
- Seek care immediately after animal bites or possible exposure
- For serious infections like rabies, timing is critical. Treatment often begins based on exposure risk rather than waiting for test results.

Testing is still available outside CDC labs

While CDC lab services are paused for certain tests, state public health labs and private companies continue to offer many diagnostics. Larger state labs and commercial providers can handle testing for viruses such as Mpox, as well as other common infections.

Testing at public health labs is often provided at low or no cost, depending on the situation. Private insurance, Medicare and Medicaid typically cover testing when a doctor determines it is necessary.

Local health departments can also help coordinate testing and direct patients to certified labs. Federal health officials said they are working with state partners to maintain access during the pause.

Public health experts raise concerns

Some health experts opined that the scope of the pause is unusual. It affects more tests than in previous reviews, and the exact reasons remain unclear.

The pause also comes after staffing reductions at the CDC over the past year. Estimates suggest the agency's workforce declined by 20 to 25 percent due to layoffs, retirements and other changes. And experts have said those cuts have affected multiple areas, including laboratory operations.

At the same time, the CDC has been reviewing its lab systems since the COVID-19 pandemic, when testing capacity and coordination faced criticism.

Why it matters

The pause does not mean testing has stopped nationwide, but it could create confusion for patients and providers, according to public health officials.

For individuals, the most important step is to stay informed and act quickly if needed. Knowing where to get tested and seeking care early can help prevent serious outcomes, especially for infections that can worsen rapidly.

Experts say the system still has safeguards in place through state labs, hospitals and private providers. But clear communication and quick action remain key while federal testing services are under review.
